Making an api call to flickr, a recycler view is filled with pictures based on the tag given by the user. When clicked on the item in the recycler view another activity is called that brings up more details about the image as well as showing a larger version of the image.